

Domestic Violence 2013 Annual Report

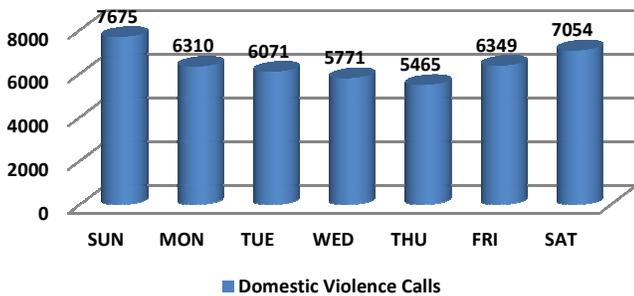

There are over one million calls for service in San Antonio each year. Every domestic violence call results in a team of dedicated officers and professionals responding to stop the violence. Those efforts are followed up by investigators and other professionals in various specialized units and departments.

In 2013 there were 44,695 calls for domestic violence. This is down 0.7% from 2012 totals.

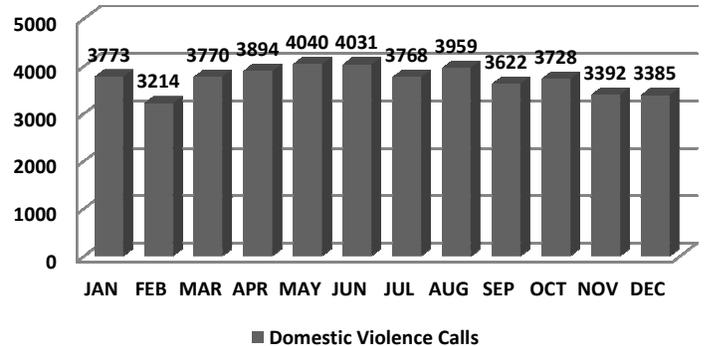

Friday, Saturday and Sunday continue to be the highest reporting days of the week, while the summer months continue to be the highest reporting months. December and January were particularly high in 2013 as well.

Individual Patrol Substation numbers did not vary much from last year and remain relatively unchanged for 2013.

Domestic Violence 2013 Annual Report

Calls for Service are not an accurate representation of crime. There are exponentially more calls than crimes. Therefore, the San Antonio Police Department uses offense reports written by officers to count actual crimes. For 2013, West Patrol and East Patrol saw significant decreases in family violence. South Patrol and East Patrol saw significant increases in family violence related crimes.
